CONCURRENT SESSIONS FOR FACULTY

Safe Zone Training

10:00 – 12:00 PM

Attendance: Open to ALL Faculty

Location: Student Union Building, Ballroom

Presenter: P.J. Sedillo, PhD

The Safe Zone program aims to create a visible network of support for our gifted lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, questioning, and intersex (LGBTQQI) individuals and their allies by providing an avenue through which any member of that educational institution can show their support. A Safe Zone is a community of people who are understanding, supportive, and trustworthy of LGBTQQI (lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, questioning, intersex) people who need help, advice, or just someone to talk to. Safe Zone Participants do not tolerate homophobic and heterosexist comments and actions but will address them in an educational and informative manner. All participants attend a Safe Zone training and have information at their educational institution and community resources.

Safe Zone members are identified by a sign that they hang on their office door or living space, or by other Safe Zone visual indicators, and are trained to be better allies to LGBTQQI students. Members agree that they work to provide a personal space that is free from homophobia, heterosexism, and transphobia while serving as a resource to gifted LGBTQQI and allied students. All students, staff, and faculty are eligible to join. "This is a safe place to talk about LGBTQQI and heterosexual issues and concerns." The session will pertain to the possibility of creating the formation of Safe Zones at your educational institution. The moderator will provide all necessary tools needed for the discussion and provide "hands on activities" that are beneficial and informative.

Mentoring Graduate Students: Writing and Mental Health

Attendance: Open to ALL Faculty

Location: Student Union Building, 321

Presenters: Benjamin J. Villarreal, EdD, Ruthy Watson, PhD, and Leon Bustos, MS

Grad school is hard, and certain concerns among both faculty and students are common. Some of these are rooted in the expectations of academic writing for specific fields, but many have less to do with academics than factors such as mental health and well-being. Led by Ben Villarreal (former Coordinator of the Graduate Writing Center at Columbia University), Ruthy Watson (HU Cares Director), and Leon Bustos (Interim Director of Highlands Undergraduate Enrichment and Highlands alumnus), this presentation will offer suggestions for advising graduate students and creating space for them to better support each other, as well as resources available to them. Finally, attendees are encouraged to bring their questions, concerns, and ideas to openly discuss what NMHU as an institution can do to better support our graduate students.

Student Success Coaching

Attendance: Open to ALL Faculty

Location: Student Union Building, 322

Presenters: Benito Pacheco, MBA and Kimberly J. Blea, PhD

The Student Success model is based on high involvement student coaching and includes regular personal contact that generates student responsibility for problem solving and decision making, and helps undergraduate students to identify solutions for poor academic performance and personal concerns. The presentation is designed to identify the strengths of student success coaching and faculty advisement to best serve the holistic undergraduate student.

Zoom link: nmhu.zoom.us/j/267087647IRB Update and Refresher on Requirements for Working with Human Subjects

Attendance: Open to ALL Faculty

Location: Student Union Building, 321

Presenter: David Pan, PhD

The NMHU Institutional Review Board reviews all research proposals that include human subjects as potential participants. Many researchers who have worked with human subjects before may not be aware of the recent changes and updates to federal guidelines in 2018. It is crucially important that NMHU faculty, students, and staff conduct research that is compliant with federal law.

Zoom link: nmhu.zoom.us/j/209374349So Many Students Struggle with Mathematics. How Can We Improve Students' Success in Mathematics?

Attendance: Open to ALL Faculty

Location: Student Union Building, 322

Presenter: Taik Kim, PhD

Zoom link: nmhu.zoom.us/j/577446734

Even though NMHU commits to establishing and strengthening structures and programs that should enhance students' holistic wellbeing and success at all levels of study, its students really struggle with math. To improve mathematics education, there are many reform movements (Lucas & McCormick, 2007), such as redesigning curricula, adding more supplemental instruction, and providing more vigorous advising efforts and intervention. However, Zachry (2008) pointed out that these efforts still do not focus on actually changing the teaching methods that failed to improve students' learning in math. Most instruction methods for math classes are still "drill-and-skill," taught from K-12 (Goldrick-Rab, 2007), even though faculty who teach math courses have more content knowledge about math than K-12 school teachers (Lutzer et al., 2007). Unless a substantial transformation is made from the way math is currently taught to using an instructional method that engages students with math concepts in a deep and lasting way, improvements in mathematics learning will be minimal (Stigler, Givvin, & Thompson, 2015).

How can we break this cycle, from poor learning from grades K-12 to community colleges, and to colleges that produce future teachers? Where do we have to start? Through previous teaching experience, I will share that actively engaging students with math concepts is one of the most critical elements to students' success. Without meaningful learning, students will continually have a hard time improving their academic success in mathematics. I will provide a teaching model to deepen students' learning, in addition to noticeably improving students' academic success.

Recognizing Student Diversity, Situating Unconscious Bias and Supporting an Anti-Bias Curriculum and Safe Educational Space

Attendance: Open to ALL Faculty

Location: Student Union Building, 320

Presenters: Eric Romero, PhD, Rebecca Maldonado Moore, PhD, and Ruthy Watson, PhD

The presentation first sets a foundation for recognizing cultural difference. It will provide strategies for identifying implicit bias (social cognition) that may function, within all of us, on an unconscious level. It may have an impact on how we interact with individuals from diverse cultural formations. Many of these cultural identities intersect around instances of privilege and oppression. These inequities are often communicated in mannerisms that are indirect or aggressive.

Zoom link: nmhu.zoom.us/j/267087647Improving Academic Enrichment: What Students Want and Deserve

Attendance: Open to ALL Faculty

Location: Student Union Building, 321

Presenter: Leon Bustos, MS

Our main goal at HUE is to have our freshmen demonstrate connectedness to their field of study and their academic work, as they recognize that their behaviors affect their academic success. Further, we aim to improve students' sense of community, belonging, and ownership as they form meaningful relationships and become part of the campus community. This round table discussion will be to update faculty about the effectiveness of the Highlands Undergraduate Enrichment Program, while also asking for feedback as we continue into the 2019-2020 academic semester.

Teaching with True Grit: Preparing for the NEA Big Read Grant

Attendance: Open to ALL Faculty

Location: Student Union Building, 321

Presenters: Benjamin J. Villarreal, EdD and Lauren Fath, PhD

For the Spring 2020 semester, NMHU has been awarded a National Endowment for the Arts Big Read grant to engage the campus and community in discussions of literature. For this grant, we selected Charles Portis' novel True Grit for its Old West connection to our community, a lens through which to view the Old West in ways that both younger and older generations can appreciate, a way of looking at the past to consider our present. Throughout the Fall 2019 semester, we will be holding curriculum development workshops on using the novel, its film adaptations, and themes across the curriculum for both Highlands and local high school faculty! This presentation will be a session for interested faculty to discuss both curriculum ideas we have for English, Media Arts, Art, Women and Gender Studies, History, and other programs. The feedback we receive from attendees will help us determine the direction of future workshops.
